Eureka, Blue!

Exciting New Discoveries of Maine Tourmaline on Plumbago Mountain

The first crystals were found on September 24, 2009. What followed was the opening of eight additional gem pockets, yielding the rarest and most desirable of all colors of tourmaline... Blue!

It is called the Eureka find. Eureka blue is a unique shade of tourmaline. It has been described as the color of the twilight sky at winter solstice. This find of winter teal gems is yielding some of the most sought-after cut and polished Maine tourmaline we have ever had the privilege to offer.

Historic finds of this nature seldom occur either here in Maine or anywhere in the world.

Stop in to see the new Eureka blue tourmaline gems as we are adding more to our collection every week.

Because this find is so new, visit our website to be kept up to date on developments. Sign up for our email newsletter so that we can share this part of Maine's gem history with you.

See The Owl

The Owl Has Arrived In Portland

The Owl was found on the north wall of gem pocket #7 on December 28, 2009 where it had stood sentry for 300 million years watching over its nest of blue tourmaline. The Owl was removed intact and is here in our store still watching over its tourmaline, only now the tourmaline have been cut and polished. The Owl has two large blue tourmaline eyes surrounded by two feather-white radiant crystals of cleavelandite. The head is owl brown lepidolite. Even if you are just a little curious you should stop in to see the owl and its tourmaline.

PUBLISHER'S NOTE

The first gems have been cut and polished and will be available set as jewelry during the spring and summer of 2010 and hopefully (if they last) well into the fall.

Compass Rose

*The compass rose is a reminder
...we are not merely travelers
but are the navigators of our destiny.*

The compass rose has appeared beautifully illustrated on maps since the 1300's. The term "rose" comes from the layered compass points resembling the petals of the well known flower.
